Redfish - Redfish

By KmmY Gbblr · November 14, 2013

The time change makes a big difference up here in the north. Driving to work at 6:30am is much easier when the sun is up. I don't spend as much time staring at my breath while the car warms up, and the timing belt doesn't seem to squeal quite as much. But the fog is still there. Only now, it's lit up in faint pinks and yellows instead of just sitting there soaking in the streetlight. New music from Redfish is just like these modest colors peeking through an otherwise monochrome landscape. Textured ambient backdrops deteriorate and warp, letting in beams of grainy percussion and washed out melodies on the band's newest self-titled release.

Redfish is made up Alexandre Navarro and Sasa Vojvodic (aka Letna), the two founders of the SEM record label based out of Paris. By combining their similar, yet unique flavors of electronic composition, they have created one of the richest, most intriguing minimal albums of the year, Redfish.
